Drupal for Good

How a CMS Can Make the World a Better Place

How Drupal Will Save the World

With a concerted push, we could solve these problems once and for all and provide free, easy to understand, user-friendly software to empower anyone, anywhere on the planet, to create the website that they need, to provide the communication that they need, to make their lives better.

This is how Drupal will save the world.

Pakistan floods: 1 year on

Over the past year Oxfam has reached over 2.4 million people with water, sanitation and hygiene facilities, tent and cash grants. Yet the humanitarian needs remain high and Pakistan is still not prepared for this year's monsoon floods.

Campaigns

GROW

Already a billion of us go to bed hungry every night. Not because there isn't enough, but because of the deep injustice in the way the system works.

Health & Education For All

The world needs six million more well-trained and well-paid teachers, doctors and nurses for poor countries. And to make this happen, the world needs you.

Agriculture campaign

Food prices are rising. Bio-fuel crops are competing for land with food crops. The risk of widespread hunger is increasing across the world. Why is this happening?

Change – campaigns

Work with us to end poverty and injustice.

The struggles of a mother in the Horn of Africa

10 August, 2011 | Blog channel: Conflict & Emergencies

I have always believed that having to bury a son or daughter is the most traumatic thing that can happen to a mother, a violation of the natural order of life. But if, on top of this, your child dies because you cannot feed him, then your pain is compounded by the impotence of not being able to respond to the most basic maternal instinct: to nourish your children.

East Africa: The preventable crisis

Rosebell Kagumire is a Ugandan journalist working on peace and conflict issues in East Africa. In this guest blog, Rosebell explains how African governments must play a vital role in preventing future famines. NOTE: The opinions reflected here are the authors own and do not necessarily reflect Oxfam policy.

Afrique de l'Est : la crise qui aurait pu être évitée

Rosebell Kagumire est une journaliste ougandaise spécialiste des questions relatives à la paix et aux conflits en Afrique de l'Est. Nous avons proposé à Rosebell de s'exprimer sur le blog d'Oxfam pour expliquer comment les gouvernements africains doivent, selon elle, jouer un rôle vital pour prévenir les futures famines. Les opinions exprimées ici sont celles de l'auteure et ne reflètent pas forcément les politiques d'Oxfam.
